Excerpt from Leaves From a Word-Hunters Note-Book: Being Some Contributions to English Etymology
In the following papers I have endeavoured to give a full, and, so far as it lay in my power, an exhaustive, examination of certain words in the English language, the derivations of which, being curious and recondite, present some special features either of interest or of difficulty. With that object I have freely availed myself of the labours of my predecessors in the same field, and have tried to concentrate in one view the results obtained by many independent and scattered investigations. Indeed, all the best authorities that lay within my reach have been had recourse to. I may mention the names of MM. Littré, Scheler, Pictet, and Renan, among French philologists; of Benfey, Diez, Diefenbach, Ebel, Grimm, Ed. Müller, M. Müller, &c., among the German.
